Microteaching - Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia

Microteaching is a teaching method whereby the teacher reviews a videotape of the lesson after each session, in order to conduct a "post-mortem". Teachers find out what has worked, which aspects have fallen short, and what needs to be done to enhance their teaching technique. Invented in the mid-1960's at Stanford University by Dr. Dwight Allen ...

At UBC we engage in a exercise called microteaching. We choose a topic and create materials and lesson plans to present to our peers. as you can see in the examples our peers can prove to be an unrealistic audience for the material, but at least we have some eyes staring back at us. Enjoy the videos and reflections that fallow! Videos ubc ...
